CLOSE-UP REQUIREMENT IN PHOTO TRAVEL EXPLAINED

A close-up is the term used to describe an image, when the person or object featured in that image, takes up most of the frame.

Firstly, the content of the Photo Travel definition must be adhered to before we can consider whether an image then complies with the close-up requirement of the Photo Travel definition i.e.

1. If the image is predominantly or exclusively a land-, sea- or cityscape, these “scapes” must include characteristic, distinctive and recognizable physical features, although it is not necessary that the image identify the exact location.
2. Images that predominantly or exclusively depict people and their activities must illustrate a distinctive culture of a country, region, or continent.
3. Images that predominately or exclusively depict animal populations are allowed, if the animals are in their native environment and are characteristic of that country, region, or continent.

If the above are adhered to, with regards to content as applicable, then:

Close-ups of people or objects must include elements depicting some of the surrounding environment to make it obvious that the image was not taken in a studio setting.

The main reasoning behind the requirement regarding close-up images, is to eliminate images that could have been taken in a studio.

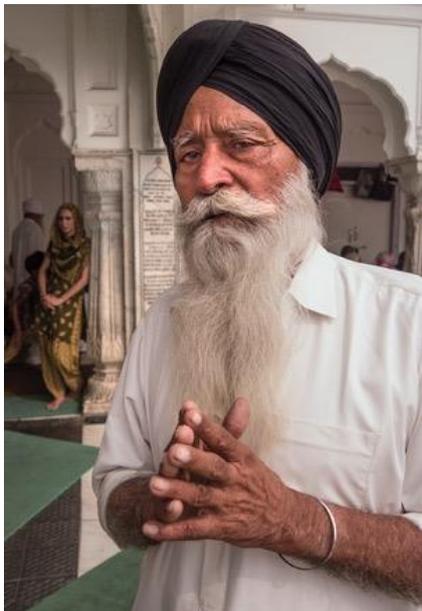

The following images comply with both the content requirement, AND the close-up requirement of the Photo travel definition.

Assessment of content: The man with the ice block on his head and his protective gear illustrates a distinctive culture of a country, region, or continent.

Assessment of the close-up requirement: The image is a close-up and includes elements depicting some of the surrounding environment to make it obvious that the image was not taken in a studio setting: other people in the background, part of a building and coloured crates.
